

DOCUMENT "A"

What do you see?	Inference (What is the student working on?)	Instructional Implication
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Student includes the name of the author and the title of the text.• Question is used as a hook.• Student only mentions one article.• Student uses 1st person pronouns.• Claim is not clear.• Student states the author's claim.• Student does not answer the prompt.• Use of textual evidence to support the claim.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Student is trying to construct an argument.• Student tries to take a stance.• Student sees both sides.• Student feels that he/she has textual evidence to support the claim.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Help (purposefully teach) students how to deconstruct the prompt.• Thesis development practice• Help students develop their analytical skills by using close reading.• Teach students how to grapple with the text to develop their understanding of the text.

Is Facebook Making Us Lonely?

(A)

In the article "Is Facebook Making Us Lonely?" by Sherry Turkle. She claims that Facebook makes us lonely. Does Facebook make you lonely? I believe Facebook does make you lonely but on the same time I don't.

The reason I believe Facebook does make you lonely is because you've never been lonely in your life then one day no one talks to you through Facebook you're not used to it and you start getting sad, lonely and depressed. In the article it says "and since we feel the need to keep up with them online, we don't find moments of solitude where we can gather our thoughts and learn to be alone." This meant that you need to be used to being lonely if your one day lonely.

I also don't agree because many people are never lonely and always talk to someone or their family members. In the article it says "now, because of the steady stream of photos and status updates, she knew what was happening with her friends all along." This shows by just posting something something you stay connected with your friends and family.

So now think about # does feedback make you feel lonely. Would you even make a feedback to experiment. Another thing you ask people for their opinion or do they feel this way.
This is why agree but don't agree with Sherry.

(A)